

Since transportation is the largest contributor to climate change in the U.S. it is critical that we make cars and trucks more efficient and move to clean cars. I urge the Environmental Protection Agency and Department of Transportation to set the strongest fuel economy standards possible with the goal to have 100 percent zero-emission vehicles in by 2035. The EPA standards must be strong enough to push car companies to significantly reduce emissions.

Addressing pollution and climate change is a moral and justice matter. My Christian faith guides me to not only protect God's creation from pollution and climate change but to also protect human health. Black communities bear a higher burden of harm from dirty vehicle pollution. Our communities are often located closest to highways and other sources of vehicle pollution. It is no surprise that black communities are disproportionately impacted by asthma and other respiratory illnesses. Stronger vehicle emission standards will help address these unequal health impacts.

The EPA and DOT must set the strongest possible federal clean car standards to ensure we are protecting families from vehicle pollution, saving drivers money at the pump, and fighting climate change. This means restoring standards at least to levels set during the Obama-Biden administration and ideally even stronger than Obama era standards.
